Event Description: For a period of 5 to 7 weeks preceding the rubber duck race, entry opportunities are obtained using adoption papers or online purchases. Every duck adopted is entered into a spreadsheet database. About a week preceding the race, each duck is tagged with an adhesive numerically sequenced 7 digit number placed on the bottom of the duck to uniquely identify it. On race day, the truckload of crates is dumped into the water of the Lazy River at Nashville Shores Waterpark. Once all ducks are in the water, they are released to flow with the established current around the Lazy River toward the finish line at which is placed a clear plastic tube that will hold as many as 10 to 15 in sequence. A sufficient number of ducks are withdrawn and the tag numbers on the bottom of each duck are recorded on a form according to the sequence in which they are retrieved from the tube. Those numbers are then searched in the database to match with the numbers that have been assigned to the randomly arranged adopted ducks prior to the race. The names of the winners are then announced and later the same day is posted on the event website. All winners are contacted by telephone or email within three days of the race. Winners need not be present and most usually are not.
